Message from the President

October was certainly a very busy month especially for the jet lagged President. Dr. David Chao had kindly accompanied me to attend GP17 in Sydney, Australia. GP 17 is the official annual conference of the Royal Australia College of General Practitioners. We arrived on the Tuesday morning and after a quick lunch, it was the conferment ceremony of RACGP. The electromagnetic force of RACGP had attracted the attendance of Presidents of Family Physicians Colleges from UK, New Zealand, Malaysia, Sri Lanka and Fiji. Over 200 GPs were conferred the fellowship and our dear old friend, Dr. Mark Miller, Chief Censor of RACGP had lost his voice after reading out the names of too many successful candidates and had to be replaced by Dr. Tim Koh, Chair of Council. My jealousy obviously popped up and I wish I can read out names at our next conferment until my recurrent laryngeal nerve palsy occurs. Not only was this a wonderful event, RACGP also gave out prizes to the best clinic and best clinical supervisor to recognize the commitment and persistent high standard of her fellows. We will definitely borrow a leaf and enrich our family doctors community.

The following day we had a meeting chaired by Dr. Bastian Seidel, President of RACGP at 7:30 am (HK time 4:30 am) with the two Colleges representatives and discussed the future arrangement of the conjoint examination. David and I were intoxicated with caffeine before the meeting to keep us awake. RACGP will soon start a unified pathway and all trainees must satisfy with all the training modules requirement including a original health in order to gain the full fellowship. New nomenclature for the RACGP international fellowship was suggested and we had an amicable discussion. I have to clear the air that our relationship with RACGP is stronger than ever and the rumour of delinking is certainly untrue at this moment! Soon after this meeting, we attended the opening ceremony of GP 17 and the keynote address was delivered by a US Paediatrician on video consultation through internet. Personally I am against internet or digital consultation. The first question asked by the audience was if one had testicular cancer, how could the internet doctor make the diagnosis? Any non-pervert will not take his pants off in front of the camera. This sums up the problem! Then in the afternoon we had the opportunity to exchange the views on the primary care systems and FM training with Presidents and the delegates of other countries. New Zealand will have 300 medical graduates out of 600 to enter FM training with the full support of the government. Hooray!

I returned on Saturday and the following day was our 31st Conjoint Examination with RACGP. I never missed Dr. Mark Miller and we reunited within three days and 7400 km apart. He and Dr. Helen Wilcox were the external examiners. We had reached the trough in terms of the number of trainees sitting the examination. The whole day ran extremely smoothly and I was heartened to see so many dedicated examiners appearing year after year. The trainees did very well and I wish them every success when the result is announced in November.

2020 Conference. Rajakumar Movement for young fellows and gender equity representation in the Council were highlighted. I was extremely pleased to see a contingent of 20 from Hong Kong and our young fellows were led by Dr. Loretta Chan. The young folks arrived early and joined the Rajakumar Movement discussion.

Dr. Donald Li, President-Elect Wonca delivered a plenary lecture on "Disaster Management and Family Medicine". Dr. Chin Weng Yee launched the Wonca guidance paper on non drug interventions for common mental health. Dr. Loretta Chan and Dr. Catherine Chen talked at the Chinese Forum. Drs. Regina Sit, Dana Lo, Chiang Lap Kin, Tse Sut Yee, Cecilia Chung and Amy Wang had oral or poster presentations. Congratulations to Dr. Chin Weng Yee winning the best poster presentation and Dr. Tse Sut Yee winning the best oral presentation! The best was yet to come, we were treated by a 14 course Blue Crab meal by Dr. Donald Li.

He is not only our spiritual leader but also our gastronomical leader in enhancing the force on consolidation of fraternity. We had wonderful team spirit! I can't wait to see more of you at the next Wonca World Conference in Seoul, October 2018.

我是家庭醫生

我是全科醫生

朱燕燕醫生

頭痛是最常見的病症了。在大陸絕大部分患者是憑經驗選擇看專科醫生，有的人選擇看神經內科、有的看神經外科、心血管內科或中醫科……一個專科沒解決問題就去另一個，就這樣，因為頭痛可能會折騰幾個科室。在深圳，這個情況會有所不同，市民對全科醫生瞭解多一些，香港大學深圳醫院更是鼓勵市民“先全科，後專科”。

我就是一名大陸全科醫生。2016年1月，一位74歲的屠先生因為頭痛走進我的診室，訴說前額及太陽穴處痛了2年，左側明顯，通常在傍晚，持續20分鐘，長的1個小時，由於頭痛逐漸頻繁，程度愈來愈重，便預約了港大醫院全科。憑藉多年的全科經驗，我沒有開頭部CT、MRI，也沒給止痛藥回家觀察，而是讓他做眼壓測定，結果左側眼壓明顯增高，考慮青光眼導致頭痛，轉介到眼科做了虹膜鐳射打孔手術後，屠先生的頭痛消除了。

中國全科醫學發展晚，2004年來到了深圳我第一次接觸到全科醫學概念，後來通過轉崗培訓，我成為了一個有婦產科背景的全科醫生，還取得香港家庭醫學學院的家庭醫學文憑。作為全科醫生，我感到自豪，因為全科醫生用自己獨特的技能多方面幫助病人，比如這位屠先生，怎會知道自己頭痛應當掛眼科呢？

Apps on the Go – Hospital Authority's "DM Care" App

Dr. John-Hugh Tam, Specialist in Family Medicine

Recently, during the search of resources for my patients with diabetes, I had discovered a new handy app created by Hospital Authority, the "DM Care 糖訊通" App. I had downloaded it and did a brief test run on it. Here is my user report on the key features that are useful for our patients:

1) Blood glucose reading chart :

The electronic database in this app provides a platform for our patients to record their daily glucometer readings which can later be converted to well-presented tables and charts after they enter personal information into the app. We can also invite our patients to take pictures of their meals and they can be stored in the database to review if needed.

Fig 1 : The main screen of the "DM Care 糖訊通" App

Fig 2: The blood glucose reading chart function provides a comprehensive picture of our patients' glycaemic control

2) Reminders

The reminders function serves 3 main purposes: To allow our patients to remind themselves to measure blood glucose level, to regularly take their drugs as instructed and to remind them for their important clinic appointments (follow-up consultations and blood taking dates)

Fig 3: The Reminders function that serves our patients as a helpful personal assistant

3) Patient & Carer Education

Information provided on the internet can be very variable and confusing to our patients. The "DM Care" App serves as an official e-platform for some basic education material. The "learn about diabetes" (認識糖尿) section aims to teach our patients about different types of diabetes (insulin dependent diabetes, non-insulin dependent diabetes & gestational diabetes), their clinical significance and specific care. There is also a section that allows our patients to understand more about the importance of good disease control and the diabetes complication screening programme. For the general public who want to learn more about the disease, the “prevent diabetes” (預防糖尿病) section teaches users about how to maintain healthy lifestyles and minimise the chance of having diabetes.

Fig 4: “Learn about diabetes” (認識糖尿)

The “disease care” (看顧技巧) section contains a series of information packages that aim at helping out with different scenarios during a typical day for our patients, for example, suggestions on food choices and healthy cooking styles, precautions before exercises, self glucose monitoring techniques and hypoglycaemia/hyperglycaemia management.

Fig 5: “Disease Care” (看顧技巧)

The “daily care” (日常生活) section of the app has several handy packages for the “special days” care plan, such as sick days management tips and tips for travelling with diabetes. I would specially recommend these 2 sub-sections for our patients to take a look and get them well-prepared before the crisis comes. And for those who wishes to learn more, the app also has a “care partners” (同行者) section that contains links for further community and internet resources.

Now One More Reason of Oral Anticoagulation in Atrial Fibrillation: Protection Against Dementia

Stroke is a known serious complication of atrial fibrillation (AF) and this risk can be reduced effectively with oral anticoagulation. Another well documented link of AF to brain function is dementia. But it is not yet clear if oral anticoagulant (OAC) treatment will help reduce the incidence until this study sheds light on this question.

It is a retrospective cohort study conducted in Sweden, including all patients with a hospital diagnosis of AF and no previous diagnosis of dementia between 2006 and 2014. Data was retrieved from the Swedish Patient register and the Dispensed Drug register, which is considered good in quality according to validation studies. More than 440,000 patients were reviewed and the patient register was used to detect incidents of new dementia during follow up for this group of subjects.

Propensity score matching, falsification endpoints and analyses according to intention to treat as well as on-treatment principles were employed as statistical methods.

2 cohorts of ~80,000 patients with and without OAC treatment were created with application of propensity score matching, and these were similar on observable cofactors. It was found that patients on OAC treatment at baseline was associated with 29% lower risk of dementia than patients without OAC treatment and 48% lower risk analyzed on treatment. There was no difference between new oral anticoagulants (NOAC) and warfarin.

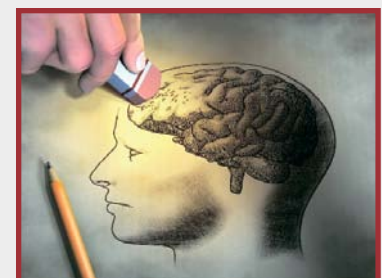

Moreover, absence of OAC was found to be an independent risk factor for dementia along with the other more well-established ones e.g. age. The benefits of OAC treatment also seemed to be more pronounced among patients who were given OAC treatment early after the first diagnosed AF episode. There was a trend towards more benefit from treatment for patients with higher CHA2Ds2-VASc scores as well.

One of the limitations of this study is that it cannot prove or disprove causal relationships, as it is a non-randomized retrospective study. Despite multivariable analysis and propensity score matching that helps compensate for known cofactors, possible confounding factors doctors considered when making treatment decisions but weren't documented in codes can still be present. Knowledge about the subjects is also incomplete in registry studies, so that patients may have diseases about which there is lack of information.

The results of this study strongly suggest that OAC treatment protects against dementia in AF, in spite of the limitations as discussed above. This assumption should have been put to the proof by randomized controlled trials, but it is truly unethical to treat AF patients at risk of stroke with placebo only. Therefore, this already serves as the second best level of evidence in this aspect, and implies one more significant reason of OAC treatment in AF patients.

Cognitive deterioration in dementia

Atrial fibrillation related to our brain health

Interest Group in Mental Health & Psychiatry in Primary Care – The 56th Meeting on 7th October 2017

Dr. Chan Suen Ho Mark (Co-ordinator), Board of Education

The 56th Interest Group in Mental Health & Psychiatry in Primary Care Meeting was held on 7th October 2017, Dr. Victoria Tang, a Specialist in Psychiatry, was the speaker.

Meeting Theme : Case Discussion on Obsessive Compulsive Disorder (OCD)

Attendance : 36

The Speaker : Dr. Victoria Tang is a Psychiatrist in private practice. She trained in Psychiatry after graduating from the University of New South Wales. She is currently on the editorial board of the East Asian Archives of Psychiatry. She works with children and adults, with a focus on ADHD, mood and anxiety disorders, work-related stress and marital problems.

Learning points prepared by Dr. Victoria Tang

Obsessive compulsive disorder is a common disorder, characterised by the presence of obsessions (ideas, images, or impulses which are recognised as originating from the self, but experienced as repetitive, intrusive and distressing) and compulsions (behaviour or action felt to be unnecessary and purposeless but performed repeatedly nonetheless since unable to resist, often to avoid the occurrence of adverse events). This could lead to significant anxiety and distress or interfere with function.

According to cognitive models of OCD, obsessions arise from the faulty appraisal of intrusive thoughts, considering them threats that need to be eliminated by various mental or behavioural strategies to reduce anxiety and/or avoid dire consequences. Although these serve to neutralise the obsession and allay anxiety in the short term, they also increase the frequency and salience of the obsession by heightening attentional bias for the intrusive thoughts.

The mean age of onset is around 20 years and the course is typically chronic with fluctuating severity of symptoms over time.

Common obsessional themes include: contamination, pathological doubt, symmetry, aggressive and sexual. Compulsions usually include repetitive checking, washing, counting, urge to ask or confess, symmetry and hoarding.

Comorbidity is common with around 50-70% of patients having depressive disorder. Other comorbidities include substance abuse, social phobia, specific phobia, panic disorder, and tics disorder or Tourette's syndrome.

For psychological treatment, cognitive behavioural therapy with exposure and response prevention is recommended by the NICE guidelines. Other techniques include behavioural therapy and thought stopping.

Pharmacological treatment involve SSRIs as first-line, and to consider clomipramine as second-line. Other augmentation strategies, including antipsychotics, were discussed.

Around 40-50% of patients have moderate improvement, a third significantly improves, while the rest may have chronic or worsening symptoms. It is important to note that relapse rates were high on stopping medications.

Case discussion highlighted the importance of both medications and psychological interventions and the principles of exposure and response prevention in the clinical setting.
